Smoke Testing. Smoke Testing is a software testing technique performed post software build to verify that the critical functionalities of software are working fine. It is executed before any detailed functional or regression tests are executed. The main purpose of smoke testing is to reject a software application with defects so that QA team does not waste time testing broken software application.

Sanity Testing Vs Smoke Testing: Introduction & Differences

It is the facility's responsibility to ensure that only properly trained and competent persons perform inspections, testing and maintenance on its fire alarm system [see NFPA 72(10), Sec.10.4.3]. Typically, facility personnel are limited to performing inspection and some basic testing activities only. The amount of testing that can be

TESTING, INSPECTION AND MAINTENANCE OF FIRE ALARM SYSTEMS

The inspection, which utilizes one of the three test methods adopted by NJDEP, must be performed at a MVC licensed diesel Private Inspection Facility (PIF). A network of almost 300 diesel PIFs has been developed across the state, in all 21 counties. Not all diesel PIFs are repair facilities.

Test methodologies adopted by the Department of Environmental Protection include the snap-acceleration test, rolling-acceleration test, and power brake test for determination of exhaust smoke opacity from heavy-duty diesel vehicles (HDDVs). In a roadside environment the snap acceleration test is utilized.
